In the
United States Court of Appeals
For the Second Circuit

AUGUST TERM, 2017

ARGUED: FEBRUARY 13, 2018

DECIDED: AUGUST 14, 2018

No. 17-1272-bk

IN RE: MATTHEW N. MURRAY.

WILK AUSLANDER LLP,
Creditor-Appellant,

v.

MATTHEW N. MURRAY,
Debtor-Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 1:16-cv-771 – Vernon S. Broderick, District Judge.

No. 14-10271 – Robert E. Gerber, Bankruptcy Judge.

Before: WALKER, HALL, and LOHIER, Circuit Judges.

Creditor-Appellant Wilk Auslander LLP appeals a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Vernon S. Broderick, J.) affirming the Bankruptcy Court's (Robert E. Gerber, Bankr. J.) dismissal of the Chapter 7 involuntary bankruptcy petition Wilk Auslander filed under 11 U.S.C. § 303(a) against Debtor-Appellee Matthew N. Murray.

ERIC J. SNYDER (Eloy A. Peral, on the brief), Wilk Auslander LLP, New York, NY, for Creditor-Appellant.

1 JOHN M. WALKER, JR., Circuit Judge:

8 The bankruptcy court dismissed for cause under 11 U.S.C.
9 § 707(a) after concluding that the petition was simply a judgment 10 enforcement tactic for a two-party dispute for which there were 11 adequate remedies under state law and that continuing the case
12 would not serve any bankruptcy purposes such as ensuring equal 13 distribution among creditors or otherwise protecting assets from 14 depletion. The district court affirmed, holding that the dismissal for 15 cause was not an abuse of discretion. This appeal followed, and we 16 AFFIRM the judgment below.

Creditor-Appellant Wilk Auslander LLP seeks to enforce a more than $19 million judgment against Debtor-Appellee Matthew N. Murray.¹ The judgment arose out of a Financial Industry Regulatory

1 Authority arbitration that awarded Murray's former employer, 2 Rodman & Renshaw LLC ("Rodman"), $10.7 million in damages for 3 New York law claims of defamation, tortious interference, breach of 4 fiduciary duty, conversion, breach of contract, and prima facie tort.

5 The arbitral award was subsequently affirmed by the New 6 York State Supreme Court and the Appellate Division and augmented
7 with interest. After filing for Chapter 7 bankruptcy, Rodman's estate
8 assigned the judgment against Murray to Rodman's law firm, Wilk 9 Auslander, as part of a settlement of outstanding fees, with any 10 recovery to be split 70/30 between the Rodman estate and Wilk 11 Auslander, respectively.

12 Murray, who lost his job with Rodman in November 2011 and 13 indicated to the bankruptcy court that he has no income, has not made 14 any payments towards his debt. Wilk Auslander asserts that Murray, 15 prior to entry of the judgment, took steps to shield his assets from 16 creditors by selling his yacht, helicopter, and car and by transferring 17 $169,000 from a United States bank account to an offshore 18 asset-protection trust. The bankruptcy court, without discussing these 19 transfers in depth, pointed out that if they were fraudulent, they could 20 be avoided under state law without the need to file a bankruptcy
21 action. See In re Murray, 543 B.R. 484, 487 n.15 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2016)
22 (citing N.Y. Debt. & Cred. Law § 271 et seq.).

1 Murray's sole asset consists of a residential cooperative
2 apartment in Manhattan, the corresponding shares of which he holds
3 with his wife in a tenancy by the entirety. In February 2013, Wilk 4 Auslander secured a lien on the shares. In February 2014, the 5 apartment was appraised at $4.6 million. The Murrays live in the 6 apartment with their two children.

7 In February 2014, as part of an effort to collect on its judgment, 8 Wilk Auslander filed an involuntary bankruptcy petition against 9 Murray. See 11 U.S.C. § 303. It is undisputed that Wilk Auslander's 10 purpose in filing the petition was to take advantage of bankruptcy 11 remedies that would allow it to force a sale of the apartment—12 notwithstanding Murray's wife's interest, which would be 13 recognized after the sale—rather than state law remedies that would 14 permit it to execute on Murray's interest only. Murray moved to 15 dismiss the petition under, inter alia, 11 U.S.C. §§ 303(i) and 305(a), 16 with costs or damages to be awarded to Murray or, alternatively, for 17 the bankruptcy court to abstain from entertaining the petition.

18 In January 2016, after discovery and oral argument, the 19 bankruptcy court dismissed the petition sua sponte for cause under 20 11 U.S.C. § 707(a), rather than under Sections 303 or 305, holding that 21 the petition amounted to an improper exploitation of the bankruptcy

1 system.² Section 707(a) authorizes a bankruptcy court to dismiss a 2 case for cause, with the determination of whether cause exists left to 3 the discretion of the bankruptcy court.³ See In re Smith, 507 F.3d 64, 73
4 (2d Cir. 2007).

5 The bankruptcy court identified nine factors supporting its 6 conclusion that the petition should be dismissed as an improper use 7 of the bankruptcy system: (1) the bankruptcy court was the most 8 recent battlefield in a long-running, two-party dispute; (2) Wilk 9 Auslander brought the case solely to enforce a judgment; (3) there 10 were no competing creditors; (4) there was no need for pari passu 11 distribution; (5) assuming there were fraudulent transfers to be 12 avoided, Wilk Auslander could do so in another forum; (6) Wilk

² We note that although the bankruptcy court indicated that Murray had moved for dismissal under Section 707, see In re Murray, 543 B.R. at 485, we agree with the district court that Murray did not raise the possibility of a Section 707(a) dismissal in his moving papers; rather, the bankruptcy court raised it during the hearing. See In re Murray, 565 B.R. 527, 530 (S.D.N.Y. 2017); Joint Appendix (“J.A.”) 362–63.

The court may dismiss a case under this chapter only after notice and a hearing and only for cause, including—(1) unreasonable delay by the debtor that is prejudicial to creditors; (2) nonpayment of any fees or charges required under chapter 123 of title 28; and (3) failure of the debtor in a voluntary case to file, within fifteen days or such additional time as the court may allow after the filing of the petition commencing such case, the information required by paragraph (1) of section 521(a), but only on a motion by the United States trustee.

11 U.S.C. § 707(a).

1 Auslander had adequate remedies to enforce its judgment under 2 non-bankruptcy law; (7) Wilk Auslander invoked the bankruptcy
3 laws solely to secure a benefit—the ability to execute on both Murray
4 and his wife’s interests in their apartment under 11 U.S.C. § 363(h)— 5 that it does not have under non-bankruptcy law and without a 6 creditor community to protect; (8) no assets would be lost or 7 dissipated in the event that the bankruptcy case did not continue; and 8 (9) Murray did not want or need a bankruptcy discharge. The 9 bankruptcy court further held that a case could be dismissed for cause 10 based on the behavior of a creditor as opposed to that of a debtor
11 because Section 707(a) has no restraints to the contrary.

12 The bankruptcy court made the following additional 13 determinations: it declined to reach the question of whether Wilk
14 Auslander filed the petition in bad faith; it declined to grant Murray’s 15 request for an award of sanctions; and it found no need to act on 16 Murray’s motion to abstain under Section 305(a).

17 Wilk Auslander appealed to the district court arguing, as 18 relevant here, that the bankruptcy court erred in dismissing its 19 petition for cause because the petition met the statutory requirements 20 of 11 U.S.C. § 303, was not found to have been filed in bad faith, and 21 would provide Wilk Auslander with relief not available outside of the 22 bankruptcy forum.

The district court, concluding that the bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the petition for cause, affirmed. The district court agreed with the bankruptcy court that New York law provides a sufficient means for Wilk Auslander to enforce its judgment and Wilk Auslander's inability to execute on Murray's wife's interest under that law does not, under these circumstances, justify a need for relief in bankruptcy court. This appeal followed.

9 “We exercise plenary review over a district court’s affirmance
10 of a bankruptcy court’s decisions, reviewing de novo the bankruptcy 11 court’s conclusions of law, and reviewing its findings of facts for clear 12 error.” In re MPM Silicones, L.L.C., 874 F.3d 787, 794 (2d Cir. 2017)
13 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also In re TPG Troy, LLC, 793 14 F.3d 228, 231 (2d Cir. 2015) (applying the same standard when 15 reviewing the dismissal of an involuntary petition).

1 omitted). We conclude in this case that a similar analysis governs our 2 review of the bankruptcy court's sua sponte decision to dismiss. Here 3 we consider whether dismissal would be in the best interest not only 4 of the parties but of the bankruptcy system.

5 In the usual case, the best interest of a debtor "lies generally in 6 securing an effective fresh start upon discharge and in the reduction 7 of administrative expenses," id. (internal quotation marks omitted), 8 whereas the best interest of the creditor goes to whether it is 9 prejudiced by dismissal, such as when the motion to dismiss is 10 brought after a significant amount of time, during which the creditors 11 were prevented from taking other measures to collect, see id.
12 Generally, however, creditors are not prejudiced by dismissal when 13 they may exercise their rights outside of bankruptcy. See In re Segal, 14 527 B.R. 85, 94 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2015).

15 A bankruptcy court's decision to dismiss a case for cause under 16 Section 707(a) is guided by equitable considerations and is committed 17 to the sound discretion of the bankruptcy court. In re Smith, 507 F.3d
18 at 73 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also In re Krueger, 812 F.3d 19 365, 369–75 (5th Cir. 2016); 6 Collier on Bankruptcy § 707.03 [1] (Richard 20 Levin & Harry J. Sommers eds., 16th ed. 2018) [hereinafter "Collier on 21 Bankruptcy"]. Accordingly, we disturb a dismissal for cause only if the 22 bankruptcy court has abused its discretion. See In re Smith, 507 F.3d at 23 73. A bankruptcy court abuses its discretion if its decision rests on an

1 error of law or a clearly erroneous factual finding or cannot be located 2 within the range of permissible decisions. See id.

3 At the outset, the following factors favor dismissal in this case:
4 Wilk Auslander is a sole creditor; judgment enforcement remedies 5 exist under state law; and no assets would be lost or dissipated in the 6 event the bankruptcy case does not continue. Wilk Auslander does 7 not dispute the existence of these factors but rests its argument for 8 invoking bankruptcy remedies upon the premise that New York's 9 remedies for enforcing a judgment on property owned in a tenancy 10 by the entirety do not adequately protect its interests. We disagree, 11 and therefore affirm.

12 I. The Bankruptcy Court Did Not Abuse its Discretion in 13 Dismissing for Cause under Section 707(a)

14 After considering the purpose of involuntary petitions, the 15 goals of the Bankruptcy Code, and a bankruptcy court's authority 16 under Section 707(a), we are convinced that the bankruptcy court did 17 not abuse its discretion in dismissing Wilk Auslander's petition for 18 cause because dismissal better advances Murray's interests as a 19 debtor, furthers the interests of the bankruptcy courts and the public, 20 and does not substantially prejudice Wilk Auslander's interests as a 21 creditor. In making this determination, we conclude that the

1 judgment enforcement remedies under New York law sufficiently 2 protect Wilk Auslander's interests as a sole creditor.

3 A. Involuntary Petitions and Section 707(a)

4 Most bankruptcy filings are initiated as voluntary petitions 5 under 11 U.S.C. § 301 by a debtor seeking a fresh start. Far fewer are 6 initiated as involuntary petitions by creditors, much less a single 7 creditor, under 11 U.S.C. § 303. See Administrative Office of the 8 United States Courts, Judicial Facts and Figures, tbl. 7.2, 9 http://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/data_tables/jff_7.2_0930.
10 2016.pdf (last visited Aug. 13, 2018).

11 Involuntary bankruptcy petitions help ensure the orderly and 12 fair distribution of an estate by giving creditors an alternative to 13 watching nervously as assets are depleted, either by the debtor or by 14 rival creditors who beat them to the courthouse. See In re Macke Int'l 15 Trade, Inc., 370 B.R. 236, 245–46 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2007). Despite these 16 benefits, involuntary bankruptcy petitions have “serious 17 consequences [for] the alleged debtor, such as loss of credit standing, 18 inability to transfer assets and carry on business affairs, and public 19 embarrassment.” In re Forever Green Athletic Fields, Inc., 804 F.3d 328, 20 335 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting In re Reid, 773 F.2d 945, 946 (7th Cir. 1985)); 21 see also In re Macke Int'l Trade, 370 B.R. at 246. “By giving creditors the 22 ability to bring a debtor into bankruptcy, Congress created a power 23 that could be abused.” Rosenberg v. DVI Receivables XVII, LLC, 835 F.3d

1 414, 419 (3d Cir. 2016). “Such a remedy exists as an avenue of relief
2 for the benefit of the overall creditor body [It] was not intended 3 to redress the special grievances, no matter how legitimate, of 4 particular creditors [Such creditors] must seek redress under state 5 law, in the state courts[,] and not in the bankruptcy court.” In re
6 Brooklyn Res. Recovery, Inc., 216 B.R. 470, 486 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1997).

7 In part because of the unusual nature of involuntary petitions, 8 Congress provided bankruptcy courts with a variety of tools with 9 which to police their use. To begin, a petition must meet the statutory 10 requirements for filing under Section 303. These statutory 11 requirements do permit single creditors to file an involuntary 12 petition, but courts tend to scrutinize such petitions closely. See, e.g., 13 In re Fischer, 202 B.R. 341, 346–48 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (explaining why 14 some courts refuse to consider sole-creditor petitions unless there are 15 exceptional circumstances such as where the creditor has no adequate 16 alternative remedy under non-bankruptcy law). The bankruptcy
17 court, though it expressed some doubt, assumed that Wilk 18 Auslander’s petition met the Section 303 requirements without 19 deciding the issue. On appeal, neither party disputes that the 20 requirements were met, and we assume for purposes of determining 21 this appeal that they were.

22 Even if a petition meets the statutory requirements of Section 23 303, however, a bankruptcy court may dismiss it for cause under

1 Section 707(a) after notice and a hearing.⁴ See In re MacFarlane Webster
2 Assocs., 121 B.R. 694, 696, 700 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1990). Wilk Auslander 3 argues that the bankruptcy court abused its discretion by dismissing 4 its petition under Section 707(a) absent a finding of bad faith because 5 Wilk Auslander’s interests as a creditor will be prejudiced if it is 6 denied access to the remedies available in bankruptcy court. We 7 conclude that New York remedies are sufficient in this case because 8 they do not substantially prejudice Wilk Auslander’s interests, they 9 better advance the interests of the debtor, the bankruptcy court, and 10 the public, and no other factors provide a basis for disturbing the 11 bankruptcy court’s discretionary ruling that cause existed to dismiss 12 the petition.

13 Cause is a fact-specific inquiry as to which a variety of factors 14 may be relevant, including the purpose for which the petition was 15 filed and whether state proceedings adequately protect the parties’ 16 interests.⁵ For example, in In re C-TC 9th Avenue Partnership, we 17 affirmed a dismissal for cause under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) where the 18 filing was the latest move in a two-party dispute that “could be fully

⁴ As the bankruptcy court noted, other chapters of the Code include similar provisions. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 930(a), 1112(b), 1208(c), 1307(c).

⁵ We agree with the bankruptcy court that Section 707(a)—and therefore precedent interpreting it—applies to involuntary as well as voluntary petitions. See In re MacFarlane Webster Assocs., 121 B.R. at 696–97; 6 Collier on Bankruptcy § 707.03.

1 resolved in a non-bankruptcy forum” and where the primary function
2 of the petition was to serve as a “litigation tactic.” 113 F.3d 1304, 1309–
3 10 (2d Cir. 1997).

4 Inappropriate use of the Bankruptcy Code may constitute cause
5 to dismiss, and courts that consider bad faith to be cause to dismiss 6 often classify such inappropriate use as evidence of bad faith. See, e.g., 7 In re Forever Green Athletic Fields, 804 F.3d at 336; Atlas Mach. & Iron
8 Works, Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 986 F.2d 709, 716 & n.11 (4th Cir.
9 1993) (“Debt collection is not a proper purpose of bankruptcy.”);
10 2 Collier on Bankruptcy § 303.16.

11 We need not, however, classify misuse of the Bankruptcy Code 12 as bad faith in order to accept it as cause to dismiss, particularly when, 13 as here, misuse is one of a number of factors supporting cause to 14 dismiss. See In re Head, 223 B.R. 648, 653–54 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1998)
15 (dismissing for an “unenumerated ‘cause’”); In re Caucus Distributions, 16 Inc., 106 B.R. 890, 923 n.43 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1989) (collecting cases 17 considering the purpose for which a bankruptcy petition was filed 18 and noting a bankruptcy court’s right to protect the integrity of its 19 jurisdiction).

20 In this case, the bankruptcy court held that nine factors 21 supported dismissal for cause. Distilled to their essence, the 22 bankruptcy court noted that Wilk Auslander’s petition was part of a 23 long-running, two-party dispute, there were no other creditors to 1 protect, and it had been brought solely as a judgment enforcement 2 device for which adequate remedies existed in state law. The 3 bankruptcy court also noted that Murray did not want or need a 4 discharge and no other goals of bankruptcy, such as pari passu

5 distribution among competing creditors, would be served by 6 continuing the petition. We agree that the factors considered by the 7 bankruptcy court favor dismissal. In concluding that the bankruptcy 8 court did not abuse its discretion under the circumstances of this case, 9 we focus particularly on the following: (1) Wilk Auslander cannot 10 show that it will be substantially prejudiced by relying on New York 11 remedies; and (2) the interests of the debtor and the bankruptcy 12 system as a whole would be advanced if this case were dismissed.

13 B. Wilk Auslander is not Substantially Prejudiced by 14 Being Denied Access to Bankruptcy Remedies

15 Wilk Auslander argues that its interests are prejudiced by 16 dismissal because New York's judgment enforcement remedies for 17 property owned in a tenancy by the entirety are not adequate when 18 compared to remedies available under the Bankruptcy Code. We 19 conclude that New York law offers adequate remedies for Wilk 20 Auslander to enforce its judgment and it is therefore not substantially 21 prejudiced by being denied access to bankruptcy remedies.

22 As a judgment creditor, Wilk Auslander has the right under 23 New York law to execute on Murray's shares in his apartment and to

1 cause those shares to be sold in a judgment execution sale.⁶ See
2 Rothschild v. Lincoln Rochester Tr. Co., 212 F.2d 584, 585 (2d Cir. 1954)
3 (per curiam) (collecting cases); In re Waxman, 128 B.R. 49, 51 (Bankr.
4 E.D.N.Y. 1991). However, neither Wilk Auslander nor any third-party 5 purchaser of those shares would have the right to execute on 6 Murray's wife's interest in the apartment, to force a partition or sale
7 of the apartment, or to inhabit the apartment. See In re Waxman, 128
8 B.R. at 51; In re Weiss, 4 B.R. 327, 330 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1980).
9 Furthermore, because Murray's wife maintains her right of 10 survivorship in the apartment, she would own the apartment free and 11 clear of any third party's interest if Murray predeceases her. See In re
12 Persky, 893 F.2d 15, 19 (2d Cir. 1989). Because of these complications, 13 most courts conclude that a debtor's interest in a tenancy by the 14 entirety is essentially the debtor's own survivorship right, which 15 could be as low as 5 percent of the total value of the property, 16 especially when factoring in the non-debtor spouse's age, gender, and 17 other actuarial data. See, e.g., id. at 20–21.

⁶ Wilk Auslander argues in its reply brief that this right is potentially illusory because New York courts may block a sale to lessen its effect on the non-debtor spouse. Some of the cases it cites for this concern relate to whether property may be sold, not whether a debtor's interest in property may be sold. See, e.g., Solomon Holding Corp. v. Stephenson, 989 N.Y.S.2d 22, 23 (N.Y. App. Div. 2014). Regardless, we fail to see how the New York court's power to account for equitable considerations differs from the bankruptcy court's authority to do the same under Section 363(h), or otherwise makes New York remedies inadequate as a matter of law.

1 Unlike New York law, the Bankruptcy Code permits the sale of 2 both the debtor's interest and the interest of any spouse or other 3 co-owner in the property, including in a tenancy by the entirety. See 4 id. at 17, 19–20. However, such sale is permitted only if, as relevant 5 here: (1) partition in kind is impracticable; (2) sale of the estate's 6 undivided interest would realize significantly less for the estate than 7 sale of such property free and clear of the interests of co-owners; and 8 (3) the benefit to the estate of a sale of the property free and clear of 9 other interests outweighs the detriment, if any, to such co-owners.
10 11 U.S.C. § 363(h). The spouse or co-owner has the right to purchase 11 the property at the price at which a sale would otherwise be made to 12 a third party and the right to her share of the proceeds, less costs and 13 expenses. 11 U.S.C. § 363(i), (j).

14 If this case were allowed to proceed in bankruptcy court, it is 15 by no means certain that Wilk Auslander would be authorized to sell 16 the apartment for at least two reasons: (1) the detriment to Murray's 17 wife may be deemed to outweigh the value to the estate, see In re 18 Persky, 893 F.2d at 20–21 (“non-economic factors” are relevant); and 19 (2) it is unclear that any sale under Section 363 would value Murray's 20 interest any higher than would a sale under New York law. Even 21 under a Section 363 sale, the proceeds Wilk Auslander can expect to 22 collect remain speculative for the same reasons they are speculative 23 under New York law, as Murray's wife's interest may be greater than

1 50 percent. See In re Levenhar, 30 B.R. 976, 979–81 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y.
2 1983).

3 We are therefore convinced that under these circumstances, 4 Wilk Auslander has not shown that its interests would be 5 substantially prejudiced if it were denied access to bankruptcy
6 remedies. This case can be distinguished from In re Tsunis, in which a 7 district court, in the context of an involuntary petition, found that 8 New York proceedings were inadequate in part because of the 9 speculative value of the debtor's interest. See 39 B.R. 977, 979 10 (E.D.N.Y. 1983), aff'd, 733 F.2d 27 (2d Cir. 1984) (per curiam). In that 11 case, because four creditors filed the petition, there was a greater need 12 for the collective remedies available only in bankruptcy court. See In 13 re Tsunis, 39 B.R. at 977, 979. This case, by contrast, involves only one 14 creditor and no risk of asset depletion in favor of other creditors.

15 Wilk Auslander's preference for bankruptcy remedies to solve 16 a two-party dispute cannot outweigh the lack of any other 17 bankruptcy-related purpose. See In re Nordbrock, 772 F.2d 397, 400 (8th 18 Cir. 1985) ("A creditor does not have a special need for bankruptcy 19 relief if it can go to state court to collect a debt."); In re Bos, 561 B.R.
20 868, 901 (Bankr. N.D. Fla. 2016) (noting that even if a creditor's 21 interests may be better served by bankruptcy remedies, the existence 22 of a state forum supports dismissal); see also Ginsberg & Martin on 23 Bankruptcy § 2.03 (Robert E. Ginsberg, Robert D. Martin, & Susan V.

1 Kelley, eds., 5th ed. 2018). And Wilk Auslander's argument regarding 2 the importance of maximizing the value of a bankruptcy estate puts 3 the cart before the horse. This proposed estate should not be in 4 bankruptcy court to begin with. Thus, we conclude that Wilk 5 Auslander has not shown that it would be substantially prejudiced if 6 it had to resort to New York remedies.

7 C. The Interests of the Debtor and of the Bankruptcy
8 System as a Whole are Advanced by Dismissal

9 Section 707(a) requires us to balance the competing interests at 10 stake in determining whether there is cause to dismiss. We agree with 11 the bankruptcy court that the interests of the debtor and of the 12 bankruptcy system as a whole are advanced by dismissal of Wilk 13 Auslander's petition. Murray's interest in not participating in this 14 involuntary case is evidenced by his vigorous opposition to the 15 petition.⁷

16 More importantly, the bankruptcy court appropriately
17 recognized the interest of the bankruptcy system, and thus the public

⁷ Wilk Auslander argues that Murray's lack of desire or need for a discharge is irrelevant to whether there is cause to dismiss. Wilk Auslander takes an overly myopic view of the interests at stake in this case. As we have already noted, involuntary bankruptcy proceedings are serious measures with drastic repercussions for the debtor. Such petitions are involuntary rather than voluntary precisely because it is the creditor, rather than the debtor, who seeks the advantages of the bankruptcy forum. Contrary to Wilk Auslander's contention, the interests of a debtor must be considered when determining whether cause exists to dismiss. See In re Smith, 507 F.3d at 72.

1 interest, in preventing parties from exploiting the bankruptcy system 2 for non-bankruptcy-related reasons, especially when adequate 3 remedies exist in state courts. See In re Murray, 543 B.R. at 494–95; see 4 also In re Caucus Distribs., 106 B.R. at 927–28. Were we to ignore those 5 interests, we would likely see an increase of new bankruptcy filings 6 in cases that are more appropriately handled in state court. This 7 increase would divert the valuable resources and attention of 8 specialized bankruptcy courts to matters intended to be addressed in 9 state court—a result that is antithetical to the purpose of having a 10 separate bankruptcy system in the first place. See In re Godroy 11 Wholesale Co., Inc., 37 B.R. 496, 499 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1984) (it is 12 “obvious that the use of the bankruptcy court as a routine collection 13 device would quickly paralyze” the bankruptcy court) (internal 14 quotation marks omitted); In re Goldsmith, 30 B.R. 956, 963 (Bankr.
15 E.D.N.Y. 1983).

16 Where continuation of a case would serve none of the 17 Bankruptcy Code’s goals or purposes, including the specific goals of 18 an involuntary bankruptcy petition, whose detriments for debtors are 19 meant to be balanced by benefits to creditors that would be 20 unachievable in another forum, and where the sole creditor is not 21 substantially prejudiced by remedies available under state law, the 22 bankruptcy court did not abuse its discretion under Section 707(a) 23 when it declined to serve as a “rented battlefield” or “collection

1 agency.” See In re Murray, 543 B.R. at 493–94 (internal quotation marks 2 omitted).

3 CONCLUSION

4 For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the judgment of the 5 district court in all respects.
